BIOGRAPHY

Jack focuses his practice on education law, advising public school systems and other education clients on legal issues affecting students, educators, and school communities. He brings a longstanding connection to public education and an understanding of the practical considerations that shape the decisions schools make every day.

Before attending law school, Jack served as a college adviser at a North Carolina public high school through the College Advising Corps, where he helped students, including those from low-income and first-generation backgrounds, navigate college admissions and financial aid.

Jack earned his law degree with honors from the University of North Carolina School of Law, where he served as Executive Forum Editor of the North Carolina Law Review and worked as a research assistant in education law. His legal experience also includes work with the Education Section of the North Carolina Department of Justice. Jack draws on this background to help education clients understand complex legal issues and identify practical solutions that support their schools, students, and communities.
